

Information on the Centennial Award - “What it is and How to do it”

The Centennial Award provides an opportunity for local bars to partner with the NCBA to honor individual members of their bar annually for community service efforts. The service may be of any nature benefiting the city or county from which your local bar membership is drawn, including elected or appointed office, participation on community boards, and volunteer efforts with churches, schools, or other non-profit organizations. Knowing how much lawyers give back to their local communities, it is important to provide recognition where recognition is due and this award focuses attention on the good work that lawyers do every day.

The Centennial Award is co-sponsored by the NCBA and was created in honor of the NCBA’s Centennial (1899-1999). The award was first presented in 1999, but it is designed to be an annual event for local bars. One of the goals of the NCBA Centennial was to inspire lawyers to the highest ideals of professionalism and service, as well as to celebrate the accomplishments of lawyers. Working with local bars annually to support and promote the Centennial Award will carry this goal forward for years to come.

Here’s what you need to do to participate in the Centennial Award program:

1. Contact David Bohm at the NCBA (see bottom of this page) for nomination information to distribute to members of your local bar.
2. Decide when to present the award. It is recommended that the award be given in conjunction with your local bar’s Law Day activities or at any time that is suitable for your local bar.
3. Have a meeting of your board of directors or executive committee to review the nominations and determine the honoree.
4. Contact the NCBA with the name of the honoree. We will order the appropriate plaque and send it to you for presentation at your local bar meeting, at no cost to your local bar. Also, we are glad to assist with press releases and other suggestions for publicizing the award recipient in your local media.

We stand ready to help your local bar with the Centennial Award. It is an easy and highly effective project for your local bar to undertake.
